Veterans Here May Receive Half Million Dollars

Believed One Thousand Men at Beach Will Average $500 Each Adjusted Compensation Benefit.

BONUS FIGHT ENDED

The so called "bonus" fight for immediate payment of World War veteran's adjusted compensation which has been carried on for several years by the leading veteran organizations of this country, ended with dramatic suddenness on Monday, Jan. 27, 1936, when the U. S. Senate overrode President Franklin D. Roosevelt's veto and ordered that a long acknowledged, deferred debt to the man who actually won the war, and saved the bonds, which kept the soldier in the trenches, and the sailor on the seas, and the marine in both places and the bondholder's homefire burning, should at last be paid in cash. On the final vote in both houses, there was no reference made to the vast sums running into the billions which was paid out to railroads, shipbuilders, communication companies and utilities for the use of their material during the war. Perhaps it was at last realized that this was no proper time to compare inanimate material with human material offered for warfare butchery. It maybe that Senator Nye's investigation of just why wars are fought, served to enlighten some of our more dense and backward representatives of public welfare at Washington.

Even Congressman Burnham, who found it convenient to be absent from a vote on this question one year ago, managed to be present and vote for his constituents this year.

Local Veterans of Foriegn Wars Post and American Legion to File Applications

At a conference held Monday, Jan. 27, 1936, between commander Fred H. Norris, Lt. Bert A. Allen post 2415, V.F.W. of the United States and commander Logan E. Ruggles, post 433, American Legion of the United States, it was decided to open an office at the American Legion hall, 1957 Abbott St., for the purpose of accepting applications for immediate payment of adjusted compensation certificates. This will eliminate the necessity for any veteran to make out and file his individual application. The office hours will be from 1 p. m. to 4 p. m. and 7 p. m. to 9 p. m., daily, except Sundays.

All veterans holding adjusted compensation certificates are advised to bring their certificates, or 'pink slip', together with their discharge from the services. All other details will be taken care of by the clerical staff on duty. There will be no charge for notary fees or postage. This service applies to all veterans, male or female, member or non-member of a veteran organization. It is for any veteran holding an adjusted compensation certificate.

The office will be open for business on Friday, Jan 31, or as soon thereafter, or as much before as possible according to when the application blanks arrive. They are expected to arrive by Friday, Jan. 31, at the latest. Veterans concerned are advised to watch the windows of the Canteen, Krafts drugs, Tony's, Baybrige cafe, Ocean Beach News and Red's Sandwich stand, as signs will be displayed in those places as soon as the application office is opened.

There will be no interruption in continued service and representatives of the company will be in the field after February 1st to make the changes and instruct customers in the use of dial equipment.

Three New Homes For Long Branch Ave.

One on Catalina

Several new homes were started in Ocean Beach this week, with a sure indication that 1936 will be a banner year for construction in this section. During 1933 more than fifty residences were completed, then thru 1934 there was a slowing up, with a start made in the early part of 1935 and very lively construction the last six months of last year. Now the demand for homes and apartments is so satisfactory that many substantial residences will be built during the year.

Permit was granted the first of the week to Albert Foss for three California homes at 4866 Brighton avenue with a 3-car garage, total amount of cost about $4,000.

E. J. Armstrong at 2007 Guizot street is making alterations to cost $400 to $500.

Ernst B. Mundkowski is building another residence and garage, frame-stucco, at 2157 Catalina blvd., to cost $2650.

The matter of having Collier park placed on an early ballot for citizens to vote over to the city school board for junior high school purposes will be taken up.

Then the ever-present fishing pier project will be discussed to see if some progress or solution can be arrived at for this most necessary improvement.

NEW BEN FRANKLIN

5c to $1.00 Store Open Saturday

Joseph and Mary Lownes owners of the Ocean Beach 5c to $1.00 Store are opening a most modern up to date store next door to their old location. Mr. and Mrs. Lownes have been in business and have lived in Ocean Beach for the last 2½ years. They have full confidence in the growth of this community and have evidenced their faith and judgement by giving Ocean Beach a new store double the size of the former one, at a considerable increased investment and merchandise.

The new store is fixtured with the latest style counters and equipment which enables them to display a complete assortment of syndicate merchandise so that their customers can view the entire line before making their selections.

Mr. and Mrs. Lownes are taking advantage of the complete facilities placed at their disposal through membership in the Ben Franklin League of independently owned stores. The membership exceeds 2700 and is represented in every state in the Union. The stores are home owned and operated, but are banded together thereby increasing their buying power so that every store will be able to serve its customers with quality merchandise at popular syndicate prices.

The Ben Franklin League supplies the members with a display and merchandise program enabling them to operate their stores in a manner to give their customers the maximum service and values.

Mr. Wm. Linee, the Ben Franklin representative in Southern California and Mr. W. F. Ackemann, Ben Franklin west coast supervisor are assisting Mr. and Mrs. Lownes in opening the new store. This paper takes this opportunity to wish Mr. and Mrs. Lownes success in their new venture.

To Build Four Houses On Niagara Avenue

In the very near future A. J. Allen will start the construction on four modern stucco cottages on corner of Sunset Cliffs blvd. and Niagara ave., making a decided improvement of that corner which he recently bought from Otto Harris of Van Nuys who has been a property owner here for several years.

Mr. Allen now has preliminary plans drawn with two houses to front on Sunset Cliffs blvd., and two on Niagara avenue. These sketches will be turned to an architect this week to draw up definite plans and specifications.

The property purchased from Mr. Harris by Allen is 100 feet on Niagara avenue and 140 on Sunset Cliffs blvd. and includes two residences 1825 and 1829 Sunset Cliffs blvd. When the new cottages are completed, they will be modern in every respect with all the latest conveniences, Allen will have six houses on this corner. He reports that he hopes to have the new homes ready for rental in ninety days' time.

Mr. Allen, who is a real old timer here, also recently purchased two lots on Newport avenue near the Hudson home at 4817 Newport.

THE FISHING PIER

(San Diego Herald)

San Diego needs a good fishing pier. The planning commission and the city council have both approved of the plans for a fishing pier to be built at Sunset Cliffs and the application for the funds with which to build it have gone forward to the WPA for approval. today The Herald was informed that Ex-Mayor John L. Bacon has turned thumbs down on the proposition and has blocked it, at least temporarilly. Are the citizens of San Diego going to stand idly by and let Bacon deprive San Diego of a fishing pier which it needs and justly deserves? It is reported that Bacon is opposing the pier because some of his friends do not want it located at Sunset Cliffs. All loyal San Diegans who are interested in seeing San Diego get the fishing pier, which would be a valuable asset to San Diego, should rise in their wrath and see that Bacon's wings are clipped before he does further damage to the city he one represented as mayor.

SCHOOL BUSES BEING JAMMED

(San Diego Independent)

"It is only a matter of time until there will be a tragedy that will bring injury or death to some of the students," declared Rev. Hughes, pastor of Point Loma Methodist church.

The bus in question, is operated by the San Diego Electric Railway company under contract to school board for which the board pays $600 a year.

Hauptmann Reprieved by Governor Hoffman—Plan Devised to Avoid New AAA Legislation—Bonus Bill Favored in Senate.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

LESS than thirty hours from the time when he was to die in the electric chair, Bruno Richard Hauptmann, convicted kidnaper and slayer of the Lindbergh baby, was given a thirty-day reprieve by Governor Hoffman of New Jersey. This means he will have at least sixty more days to live, because he will have to be re-sentenced. The governor did not give specific reasons for his action. He did say: "A reprieve is an act of executive clemency rather than judicial clemency. I am not required to give a reason, but I might say that there are grave doubts in this case, not only in my mind, but in the minds also of our citizens."

Bruno Hauptmann

There will be only the one reprieve, "unless the evidence should warrant" another, the governor said. If Hauptmann is to be finally saved it must be through the presentation of sufficient new evidence to warrant Justice Trenchard granting a request for a new trial, or for a new plea for clemency to the state pardons court.

The stay came after the United States Supreme court at Washington refused to admit attorneys to file a petition for a writ of habeas corpus for Hauptmann. That closed the door to all further legal action designed to delay the execution.

Various stories about the crime, some new and others old, are going the rounds and are being investigated by authorities and by the forces of the defense. They are too complicated for summary here.

LITERARY DIGEST'S Presidential straw vote has been concluded, and the final returns indicate a growing opposition to the New Deal. A total of 1,907,681 ballots was received, and of these 62.66 per cent were cast against the President's policies and acts, and 37.34 per cent were for the administration.

Thirty-six states gave majorities against to eleven still in favor of the President and his policies. Among the pro-Roosevelt states was Utah. The others were classified in the release as "southern and border" states.

Of the different sections of the country, New England cast the heaviest "No" vote, going 77.98 per cent against the administration. The Middle Atlantic states from New York to West showed 68.89 per cent of the voters against Mr. Roosevelt and his recovery schemes, while the Middle Western states in the farm belt and the Rocky Mountain states indicated a ratio approximately the same as the nation at large—3 to 2 against. The three Pacific coast states totaled 58.04 against the New Deal.

THERE will be no new legislation to continue the aims of the AAA, if the plans of the administration are adopted, for it has been found by officials that the soil conservation act of 1935 will permit the undertaking of about everything in the bill that the house and senate agriculture committees were drawing up.

Sen. Robinson

In a White House conference the new program was agreed upon by President Roosevelt, Senator J. T. Robinson, majority leader; Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Attorney General Cummings, Chairman Ellison D. Smith of the senate agriculture committee, Chairman Marvin Jones of the house agriculture committee, Speaker Joseph W. Byrns, Senator John H. Bankhead (Dem., Ala.), AAA Administrator Davis, and M. G. White of the AAA.

The administration will work out a system of granting farm subsidies to farmers restricting acreage under authority of the soil conservation act of 1935. In connection with the program the administration will make provision for obligations incurred under the AAA.

In a radio address Herbert Hoover offered the country his own plan for bringing recovery to the farmer. Asserting that a new road must be built by which agriculture can "get back onto the solid ground from the quicksand of the New Deal," Mr. Hoover outlined three general or group proposals for farm recovery.

They were:

1. The restoration of the home market to American farmers.
2. The retirement of "thin" and submarginal acres, along with a slowing up of reclamation of projects.
3. Encouragement of co-operative marketing and the further improvement of farm credit machinery.

SEVENTEEN persons met a tragic fate in the worst airplane accident that the United States has had. A big transport plane of the American Airlines, en route from New York to Los Angeles, crashed in a swamp near the village of Goodwin, Ark., and its 14 passengers, two pilots and stewardess were killed. With great difficulty the bodies of the victims were brought out of the marsh where their bodies were found scattered among fragments of the shattered plane. Officials of the government and of the airline company immediately started an investigation, but the cause of the disaster could not easily be determined.

ALL the air lines of the country have united in the formation of the Air Transport Association of America, whose president and "czar" is Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, chief of staff of the army air service during the World war. Fowler W. Barker, war pilot and former secretary of the transport branch of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, was elected secretary and treasurer.

Co-ordination of schedules, credits, advertising, engineering data, and purchasing power among the various operators prompted the organization of the new association which is intended to be an "ideal trade association." Its functions will be similar to those of the North Atlantic steamship conference and Colonel Gorrell will have powers approximating those of Will Hays of the movies and Judge Landis of baseball.

SENATOR PAT HARRISON'S compromise bonus measure, providing for payment in baby bonds redeemable on demand, was given the right of way in the senate and its passage seemed certain after a brief and lively debate. The veterans' organizations whose bill had been passed by the house accepted the compromise, so it evidently was on its way to the White House for action by the President. What Mr. Roosevelt would do was not known, reports that he would veto the bill being offset by rumors that he would approve it despite the disapproval of treasury officials.

Sen. Pat Harrison

On the eve of action by the senate every member of that body received from the Economy league a letter written by its president, Henry H. Curran, warning that the bonus legislation would "destroy any chance for confidence in the finances of our government that is necessary if we are ever to regain national prosperity."

The letter said that the national budget is unbalanced, national credit slipping, taxes increasing, purchasing power of the dollar declining and inflation drawing near.

"But that is not all," Curran declared; "the veterans' organizations, as soon as the prepayment of the bonus is authorized by you—if it is—are going after you for service pensions, that is to say, for money pensions to veterans just because they are veterans, even though they were never touched by the war.

"And this means more billions handed out to a special class at the unjust expense of all the rest of our people who are trying, in the face of heavy taxes and financial uncertainty, to struggle up out of five years of hard times."

HAPPY days are nearing for the indigent, for the Social Security board is beginning to operate. It has announced the appointment of five persons who will administer the social security act.

Murray W. Latimer of Mississippi was appointed director of the bureau of federal old age benefits. R. Gordon Wagenet of Berkeley, Calif., was appointed director of the bureau of unemployment compensation. Miss Jane M. Hoey of New York was made director of the public assistance bureau of the social security board. Louis Resnick of New York was named director of the informational service bureau.

The board also announced the appointment of Robert E. Huse of Cambridge, Mass., as assistant.

HAVING spent about $22,000,000 in connection with the steamship Leviathan, the government will now spend approximately $9,000,000 more on the building of a new vessel to take the place of the great ship that was taken from Germany in wartime. Secretary of Commerce Roper announced the acceptance of a contract submitted by the United States Lines for construction of a sister ship to the Washington and Manhattan.

The contract was executed by the shipping line with the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock corporation for $11,900,000 for the new ship. Under the new agreement the government may lend up to 75 per cent of $9,000,000 of the cost of the vessel.

MRS. THOMAS D. SCHALL has filed nomination papers as candidate for the senate seat made vacant by the death of her husband, the late senator from Minnesota. Mrs. Schall says if elected she will carry on "the same vigorous fight" against the New Deal as was waged by her husband.

Rains in Ethiopia Stop the Italian Operations

ETHIOPIA'S "little" rainy season has come, and the advances of the invading Italians are therefore stopped effectually for several weeks at least. The downpours are heavy and continuous, roads are being destroyed, especially in the northern part of the country, and landslides in the mountains are frequent. Foreign observers were of the opinion that all fighting must cease, even in the south where the rains are not so heavy. The "big" rainy season is due to begin in May.

Dispatches received in Rome said 50,000 native troops under General Granziani and 60,000 Ethiopians commanded by Ras Desta Demtu, son-in-law of Emperor Haile Selassie, engaged in a desperate battle along the entire southern front, and that the Ethiopians, who had been converging on the Italian army at Dolo, were in "full retreat."

The Ethiopian government announced that a Red Cross unit headed by Maj. Gerald Burgoyne of England had been bombed and destroyed by Italian planes at Waldia, 90 miles north of Dessye, the communique said seven women and seven old men were killed and half the town burned, and added that the unit was plainly marked with the Red Cross insignia.

Mussolini continued the dispatch of fresh troops to Ethiopia, despite unfavorable conditions. He postponed the meeting of the Fascist grand council from January 18 to February 1, by which time the League of Nations council, it is presumed, will have decided whether to impose an oil embargo on Italy. The league council would very much like to have the United States congress pass its neutrality legislation before the oil embargo question is settled.

Dr. Marcel Junod, International Red Cross delegate, announced at Addis Ababa that he would recommend withdrawal of all Red Cross units from Ethiopia unless Italy definitely promised not to bomb them.

FAILING in their demand for the right of full equality of naval strength for Japan with Great Britain and the United States, the Japanese delegates withdrew from the conference in London and prepared to go home. The American, British, French and Italian delegates, however, refused to let the parley collapse and constituted themselves a four-power conference. Their hope is that they may arrive at some agreement on the size of warships and on limitation of gun calibers; but any real building limitation agreement is admittedly impossible without Japan. It is the intention to invite Germany and Russia to take part in the deliberations, and later the Balkan nations may be invited to participate.

The Japanese, in withdrawing, emphasized their desire to avoid a building race. Their demand is for equality with other powers, on the ground that if the big navies were equal, none could attack another in the defender's home waters. The American argument is that equality does not mean real security, because the United States is so situated geographically, and has such possessions to defend, that it needs a navy superior to Japan's to feel secure.

SOVIET RUSSIA expects to be attacked on both flanks, and is making ready for the conflict, feeling that it can count for defense only on its own forces. The government's newspaper, Journal de Moscou, asserts that Germany and Japan have completed a military coalition or are about to do so, and that it appears Italy wishes to join that alliance.

The Soviet Union already has delivered its answer to alleged war threats with the announcement that its army—the greatest in the world—has been increased during the last year to 1,300,000 men. The bolsheviks estimate they also have a trained reserve as large as that under the czars, when 10,000,000 were called to arms.

If this expected war comes in the east it will start because of the attacks by Manchukuo on the Mongolian frontier, where there have been repeated clashes. In the west it may begin with an attempt of Germany and Poland to conquer the Ukraine.

Maj. Gen. Hayao Tada, commander of the Japanese in North China, predicts that a Russo-Japanese war will begin with a Russian offensive when the soviet's second five year plan is completed, possibly this year.

HARRY L. HOPKINS, WPA administrator, has sent to state administrators a set of regulations intended to protect WPA workers from "chiseling" employers and to keep up wage standards. In his letter to the state officials Mr. Hopkins said:

Harry L. Hopkins

"I want to make perfectly clear the policy of the works progress administration relative to private employment or employment on contract jobs under the direction of other federal departments which may be offered the WPA workers.

"It is expected that WPA workers will accept available jobs in private employment, whether of a permanent or temporary nature, provided:

"(1) That the temporary or permanent work shall be a full-time job.

"(2) That such work shall be at a standard or going rate of wages.

"(3) That such work shall not be in conflict with established union relationship.

"(4) That workers shall be offered an opportunity to return to the WPA upon completion of temporary jobs."

WHERE TWO PERISHED IN AIR CRASH

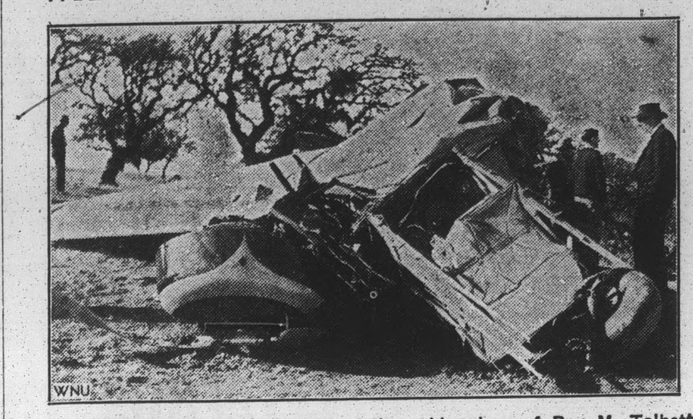

Photo shows all that was left of the cabin plane of Roy M. Talbott, Fresno merchant, after it crashed on a wooded hillside in Pacheco Pass. Talbott and his companion, Roscoe Howard, were both killed. It is believed that the plane became lost in the fog and crashed while flying low as its pilot sought direction markers.

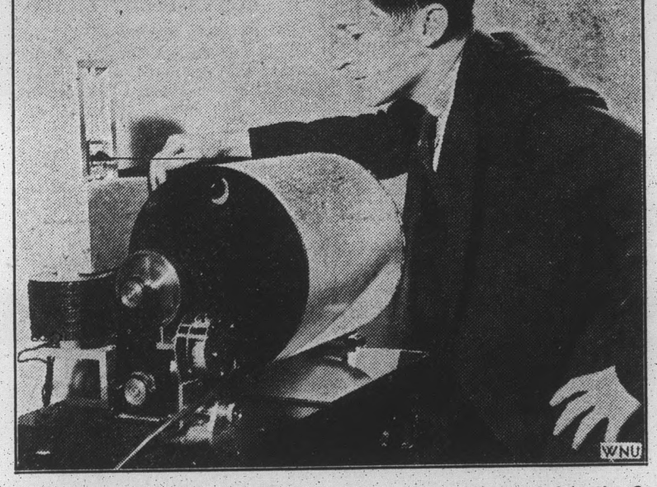
HERE'S HOW QUAKES ARE MEASURED

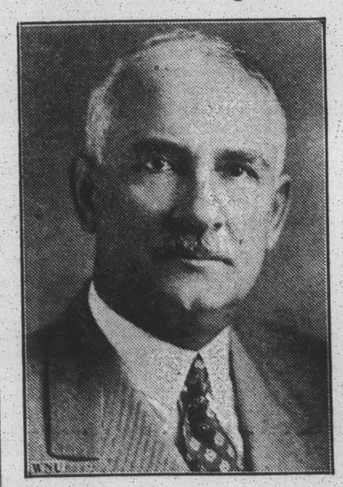


When Old Mother Earth shivers a little, instruments located in the Carnegie Institute Seismological Laboratory, Eagle Rock, California, record that shock. Here is an actual photograph of a seismograph waiting for an earthquake. The needle-line pen traces a record of the shocks on the paper-covered cylinder, when impulses are received from the instrument, which records the vertical motion. Cal-Tech student, Leonard Uhrig, is shown studying the record of earth movements left on the cylinder, part of his duties in connection with the observations made by the college.

Sports Queen

Miss Jean Toffee, Sacramento Junior College student, was proclaimed queen of the northern California winter snow sports season at the fourth annual winter sports carnival at Sacramento.

SRC Chief Quits



Sounding a warning that California must be prepared to face the future with heavy unemployment relief rolls as a permanent financial burden, Ralph E. Jenney of San Diego resigned as chairman of the State Relief Commission at the last session of the relief body in San Francisco. Jenney said pressure of private business interests necessitated his action.

SAMMY JAY WORRIES

IT ISN'T often Sammy Jay worries about anybody but himself. Truth to tell, he doesn't worry about himself very often. You see, Sammy is smart and he knows he is smart. Under that pointed cap of his are some of the cleverest wits in all the Green Forest. Sammy seldom worries about himself because he feels quite able to take care of himself.

But Sammy Jay was worrying now. He was worrying about Lightfoot the Deer. Yes sir, Sammy Jay was worrying about Lightfoot the Deer. For two days he had been unable to find Whenever He Had Found One of Them, He Had Screamed at the Top of His Voice.

Lightfoot or any trace of Lightfoot. But he did find plenty of hunters with terrible guns. It seemed to him that they were everywhere in the Green Forest. Sammy began to suspect that one of them must have succeeded in killing Lightfoot the Deer.

Sammy knew all of Lightfoot's hiding places. He visited every one of them. Lightfoot wasn't to be found, and no one whom Sammy met had seen Lightfoot for two days.

Sammy felt badly. You see, he was very fond of Lightfoot. You remember it was Sammy who warned Lightfoot of the coming of the hunter on the morning when the dreadful hunting season began. Ever since the hunting season had opened Sammy had done his best to make trouble for the hunters. Whenever he had found one of them he had screamed at the top of his voice to warn every one within hearing just where that hunter was.

Once a hunter had lost his temper and shot at Sammy, but Sammy had suspected that something of the kind might happen and he had taken care to keep just out of reach.

Sammy had known about the chasing of Lightfoot by the hounds. Everybody in the Green Forest had known it. You see, everybody had heard the voices of those hounds. Once Lightfoot had passed right under the tree in which Sammy was sitting, and a few moments later the two hounds had passed with their noses to the ground as they followed Lightfoot's trail. That was the last Sammy had seen of Lightfoot. He had been able to save Lightfoot from the hunters, but he couldn't save him from the hounds.

The more Sammy thought things over, the more he worried. "I am afraid those hounds drove him out where a hunter could get a shot and kill him or else that they tired him out and killed him themselves," thought Sammy. "If he were alive somebody certainly would have seen him, and nobody has since the day those hounds chased him. I declare, I have quite lost my appetite worrying about him. If Lightfoot is dead, and I am almost sure he is, the Green Forest will never seem the same."

MY WAY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

LET me be up at morning,
And let me on my way,
For, with so much to see, to do,
Then who would long delay?
Let me go seeking fortune,
Let me go finding fame,
And doing something for the world,
The world that does the same.

Let me be far at noontide,
Be far upon the quest,
For with so much to do, to see,
Then who would care to rest?
I hear the pulleys rumble,
I hear the traffic roar,
A hundred matters to be done
And highways to explore.

Let me be up at morning,
Let me be far at noon,
For with so much to see, to do,
And so the morn to venture,
And so the day to roam,
But, when the evening shadows fall,
Let me be coming home.

Progress Made in Berlin Preparatory to Olympics

The Olympic games will take place in the 300-acre Reichssportfield situated in the west end of Berlin. The huge stadium, which is 85 per cent completed, has seats for 100,000 spectators. The stadium arena contains a running track 400 meters long. The swimming stadium contains a 65-165-foot pool, a large restaurant overlooking the pool.

The Dietrich-Eckert open-aid theater in the form of a Greek bowl will be used for dramatic productions and assemblies. The Olympic bell which will peal to open the games is of steel and weighs 16 tons. It was removed from its casting last August. The altar on the stadium tower will be lighted on August 1, of this year, by the Olympic fire, the flame of which will be brought from the site of the original Olympic games by 3,000 runners who will travel in relays.—Washington Star.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

POTTED MEATS AND FISH

IN ENGLAND potted meats are so common that the everyday cook knows all about preparing them. We like to have such meats occasionally, and the following are reliable methods of preparing such dishes.

Meat such as ham, tongue or chicken, as well as left-over fish is potted for a luncheon dish, rather than use it in other ways, such as hash, which is all too common in some homes. The goodness of the potted meats is, of course, first of all, in the meat, then in the proper pounding and preparation and seasoning. If carefully prepared and put away, these will keep for a long time, and may be used for an occasional snack or an emergency dish.

Potted Chicken.

Take a cold roast chicken, rejecting the skin and sinews, chop fine and to every pint allow a half-cupful of chopped ham or tongue. Put the bones of the fowl into a saucepan, add a pint of cold water and simmer until there is half a pint of stock; strain and remove the fat. Pound the chicken, and ham or tongue to a smooth paste in a mortar with an old-fashioned pestle; this makes a smooth paste; or it may be put several times through the food chopper until fine. Then pound—the pounding makes the meat of the creamy consistency needed. Add a little of the broth, season with cayenne, nutmeg and a tablespoonful of butter. Put into small jars, press down and cover with a cloth, then cover the cloth with a flour and water paste. Bake in a moderate oven for half an hour, having the jars in water. Take out, remove the cloth, cover with melted butter, then tie over a paper moistened with egg white and set away to keep in a cool dry place until wanted. This will keep for months, and makes a fine hot-weather dish. This will be a good way to take care of extra chicken at any time. Fresh beef tongue, cold roast veal, boiled or roast mutton, ham and smoked tongue are all most tasty treated in this way.

The Fishing Pier--- Goes Round and Round

but up to date, it has not come out HERE! Thursday of last week the city planning commission again discussed the pier project at Sunset Cliffs park when Matt Gleason, chairman, ruled the action of the previous week was out of order. Councilman Al Bennett was champion of the project. He wanted to have the commission rescind the commission's original disapproval and appealed from Gleason's ruling, however, the ruling of the chairman was sustained by the following vote. Ayes, Gleason, L. H. Fish, Hans Jorgenson and H. B. Yakel. Noes, Charles Quayle, Harry S. Clark and G. G. Williams. Bennett challenged the right of Gleason to vote on his own ruling and the question was never settled.

On Friday evening a meeting was called at Sunset Cliffs where several Ocean Beach people voiced their opinion and the Sunset Cliffs residents claimed they would continue their fight against locating the pier there. After a good deal of bickering a compromise was suggested; that the city buy a vacant block at foot of Point Loma avenue on the south side of the street which adjoins Sunset Cliffs park; and put in the original project from this location. When that meeting adjourned the question though, was more or less unsettled but we are informed, Councilman Bennett believed the council might buy the block in order to advance the project.

Another plan was suggested by some of the San Diegans last week, when they thought it would be a good scheme to construct jetties at Mission bay channel entrance, to make the bay accessible to pleasure boats, then on these jetties build walks and have them wide enough to accommodate the fishermen. The latter plan, however, is said not feasable on account of property lines being in question and likely could not be settled for several years. In fact the jetty plan was understood to have been originated by the city engineer's office, who are not in favor of the Sunset Cliffs pier project, and perhaps not in favor of any pier that they would have to serve as architects, on account of their inexperience in this line, and perhaps inability to plan a serviceable structure.

England and Great Britain are in deep bereavement in the loss of two of their greatest personages, coincidentally of the same age; seventy years; King George, ruler of the Empire and Rudyard Kipling, famous poet and man of letters. King George ruled with distinct honor to himself, a little more than a quarter of a century; although a peace-loving king, his reign was through a bloody European warfare with rumors of wars in many foreign nations. He was one of the most beloved kings ever set on the British throne and his name will go down in history with apparent honor resting upon the Royal Family of England. King George and Queen Mary were keenly devotional, there being only two years between their ages, she was 68 years, and always companionable; during the sad bereavement she was a brave figure.

• • • •

Rudyard Kipling, the modern Shakespeare, lived a busy life in devotion to his facetious pen, writing and publishing books, novels, poetry and short stories. His first book came out when he was but 21 years old, and it has an annual sale of 100,000 copies. Kipling, was the best authority on the use of good English, and many of his phases were endorsed and adopted into the English language. The 70 years of his life were a good example of economies and literary frugality by choosing the best meaning in simplified terms, to be understood by the reader. His life was a rich legacy to world literature and much of his works will long survive, even for centuries since he died. The grand old man of English letters died without official recognition from the Empire he praised and had a large part in creating. The title as laureate of the Empire, dearest of a poet's heart, never became his. Kipling was born in far away Bombay, India, but was educated in England, and married an American lady. His immortal poem, "If," is one of the celebrated poetical masterpieces in modern literature.

Balboa Park, the picturesque setting for the 1936 California Pacific International Exposition, is one of nature's most sightly and best fitting enclosure of anything found outdoors. A gang of 1400 workmen have been employed the past three months putting on the finishing touches, and with the re-opening an incomparable aggregation of beauty in garden splendor awaits the visitor, who will delight in the grandeur greater than ever this year. A riot of flowers and greenery, level walks, ornamental creations and natural attractions all prepared and arranged in the order for the summer exhibit. One successful season of achievement in 1935, points to a glorious repetition again for this year, and much better and greater. San Diego has spared no pains nor expense to make this year the very best show ever witnessed in California and this state has always been credited with keeping her splendid record of past expositions.

A man's duty is to be honest; too often he seeks popularity, which must have something else with it. He must be honest and right at first! There is a close analogy found between the greedy and deceitful. Such a person's word is just a mere question mark; he is trying to climb the ladder of fame through selfishness rather than service. He may vision and gradually degrade from principle to an object of revenge and pity, which are synonymous to unreliable citizenship. Where is the one who will be willing to make sacrifice in order to gain both popularity and prudence in society? And thereby hangs a tale

Shepherd, drama director at Point Loma sponsored the beautification of the auditorium, with the result that the Board of Education had it painted. Miss WillaB Brodie of the art department supervised the designing of the chandiliers.

Since the necessary equipment is lacking at the school, the Point Loma PTA donated twenty-five dollars for the work, choosing Mrs. Edward Janowsky, who made the chandiliers for the Cafe of the World, to do the work. Students in the art department assisted her by doing the hand work. The Spanish motif showing galleons and dolphins was used,

Charles Dahl did the major work on the frames under the direction of George Rye, director of woodshop classes at Point Loma.

New King Greeted First On Coast By Local Man

A. J. Allen arrived home last week after visiting many of his old friends around Los Angeles, Pasadena, Glendale and Van Nuys. He has now two new hobbies. Each town that he goes to, he purchases three post cards of the vicinity and then goes to the postmaster and asks him to stamp the post card with his dating stamp and in this way he can always refer back to the date that he was in a certain town or city and his goal is two thousand post cards of cities and towns.

He has already, three linen table covers with about seven hundred post marks of thirty eight states and two foreign countries. One marvels at the patience he has, and the great trouble he goes to in obtaining these post marks and he is so interested in our California-Pacific Exposition of 1936 that he gives a good description of what is going to be there to each one of the post masters so they can tell their friends. He also looks up the editors of the press and gets them to say something about the Exposition, and he tells them of his wonderful travels.

Mr. Allen has roamed up and down the seven seas of the world. He has visited nearly every country and has been in every city of any consequence in the United States, and every town in the Dominion of Canada of 500 inhabitants and over from Victoria to Cape Britain Island, Nova Scotia, and a few years ago he traveled all over Australia from one end to the other. He also went on an expedition in the wilds of Australia and this time he and his party for several days had given up hope of ever coming out alive. They had run out of water. Their guide who had been in that part of the wilderness some fifteen years previous, thought he could guide them to what is known in that part of the world as a bottle tree and this was found. The belly of the tree, Mr. Allen relates, is like a bottle with hundreds of small branches growing out of the top of the bottle, and they act as a pump. The roots penetrate the earth one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet. In this part of the country it had not rained for seven years and the previous rain was five years so there was only one rain in twelve years.

Mr. Allen was born in Wales and he is very proud always to tell the story about the present King of England. In 1920 the present King then His Royal Highness, The Prince of Wales, was met by Mayor Louis Wilde and the dignitaries of San Diego. They all went out on a tender to meet and greet His Highness on His Majesty's ship "Renown". After the greetings, the party came ashore and the Prince in his small yacht arrived at the foot of Broadway, this being his first visit to the Pacific Coast. There were at least twenty-five thousand people waiting for his arrival. The soldiers who served in the British army and all her colonies were lined up and the first person he spoke to on the shores of the United States was Mr. Allen, he being first in line who had served in the British army. The Prince asked what regiment he served in, Mr. Allen replied, "The 28th Gloucester." Then the Prince said, "My grandmother, Queen Victoria, gave a great honor to this regiment, giving them the privilege of wearing their number on their caps front and rear." This honor was bestowed upon them for the gallantry they displayed in the Crimean War in 1854-56 at the Battle of Balaklava. The command was given that the rear rank should be made front rank so this regiment fought rear and front. This is the reason for the double numbers on the caps. It was many years after the honors were bestowed upon this regiment that Mr. Allen joined it. He goes on to say that during the Crimean war the famous charge of the Light Brigade took place at the Port of Balaklava and the beloved Florence Nightingale of great fame nursed and saved hundreds of lives with her thirty-seven nurses during that terrible Russian winter on the shores of the Black Sea. Allen is an interesting talker and frequently lectures on his travels and adventures for clubs and civic groups.

POULTRY HELPS.

By E. E. Steele.

Rachitis (rickets) is a disease of the bones of growing chicks caused by insufficiency of lime salts in the feed. The bones are soft and deformed, as is frequently shown in chickens with crooked legs or crooked breasts. Catarrh of the intestines sometimes occurs.

To aid in overcoming a tendency to rickets in baby chicks feed a baby chick feed that contains cod-liver oil, feed a good proven feed. Growing chicks should receive a varied ration, including green feed, and a supply of ground oyster shell, also milk to drink or dry milk in the mash feed

QUESTIONS—In regard to poultry will be answered in these columns if you will call Bayview 1324 or send a post card or letter to E. E. Steele, 4247 Montalvo St.

A HANDY grease gun for your transmission or differential can easily be made from an old tire pump. Cut the barrel down to a convenient length. Whittle a round wooden plug to fit the barrel. Drill a hole in the center of the plug, insert a short length of brass tubing, and force the plug into place in the barrel. Internal suction of the pump plunger will draw in the grease.

A blowtorch will usually loosen nuts that cannot be loosened with a wrench or by soaking with kerosene. If the flame is directed on the nut for a few minutes the nut will expand away from the bolt. When working on the heated nut be sure to use a tight-fitting wrench, so as not to damage the hot metal.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Love" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon on Sunday in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. The Golden Text is from I John 3:18, "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth."

Among the Bible selections in the Lesson-Sermon are these verses from Jeremiah: "For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he. Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the young of the flock and of the herd: and their soul shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all."

A correlative passage from the Christian Science textbook "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, states: "Unfathomable Mind is expressed. The depth, breadth, height, might, majesty, and glory of infinite Love fill all space. That is enough! Human language can repeat only an infinitesimal part of what exists."

The speaker for Sunday, February 2, is Mrs. Grace Knoche, her subject being "The Esoteric Tradition in World History". Subtitles for the following weeks are: "Penumatology and Psychology," 'Webs of Destiny', and 'Dogma and Gnosis.' Mrs. Knoche in her presentation will trace the thread of a universal osotericism through the Vedas of ancient Hindusthan, through the literature of the Chinese, dealing particularly with the great exponent of Taoism, Lao-Tse; she will touch on the quatrains of 'Omar' and the verses of Jalalu'd-Din Rumi, and draw also from the Christian Bible. Theosophy has roots in all these, and indeed those roots are the traditions of truth at their core, which today Theosophy interprets, thus revivifying all religions and reinterpreting them, while at the same time presenting before the world a body of truth which is greater and which stretches farther back into time than any single religion. La Fayette Plummer will assist Mrs. Knoche in answering questions.

SYNOPSIS

John Spencer and his cousin, Geoffrey Bohun, are vacationing in Austria. Geoffrey is a gifted portrait painter but prefers to paint landscapes. While strolling in the forest, John hears English voices, and decides to investigate. From safe cover he finds four men burying a man in green livery who, evidently, had been murdered. Pharaoh is the leader of the gang; the others are Dewdrop, Rush and Bugle. Unfortunately, John makes himself known to the assassins by dropping a letter with his name and address on it. He tells Geoffrey and his chauffeur, Barley, of his adventure. Geoffrey, realizing that John's life is in danger, declares he must vanish. Spencer discovers that the livery of the murdered man corresponds to the livery of the servants of Yorick castle, and tells Countess Helena, mistress of the castle, what he had seen. With Geoffrey and Barley, John starts for Annabel, a nearby village. They encounter Pharaoh. In making their getaway they exchange shots with the gang, without serious result. They arrive at Plumage farm, on the Yorick estate, where Lady Helena had requested John and his cousin to meet her. She reveals to them that her father had converted his immense fortune into gold sovereigns and hidden them away in a secret vault in the castle. Knowing that his son, Valentine, Helena's brother, was incapable of controlling the fortune, he had revealed it to Helena alone just before his death. In some manner the news had leaked out, and Pharaoh is after the treasure.

The warden lifted his head and looked me full in the eyes. Then he turned his head to his mistress and looked at her. Though he never spoke, he seemed to ask her some question, for after a moment she nodded and looked away.

With his hand still in mine, the warden went down on one knee.

"Your servant, sir," he said quietly. And then, "I am very grateful, sir. I cannot say more. But I beg you will be careful. My son will not rest in his grave if you come to hurt."

Then he rose and turned to his mistress, and when she had smiled and nodded, he bowed to her and to me and left the room.

As the door closed behind him—

"He shouldn't have knelt," said I.

Helena shrugged her shoulders.

"That's his affair. But please tell no one he did so. You and he and I know, and that's enough."

Upon a sudden impulse, I put out my hand for hers. She gave it to me gravely enough. Then I went down on one knee and put the cool, slight fingers up to my lips. . . .

As she caught her breath—

"Your servant," I said quietly, "and you may tell whom you please."

* * * * * * *

Eight hours had gone by, and I was sitting at Villach, in the driver's seat of the Rolls. My cousin was on the platform, but the car was berthed in the shadows, perhaps a hundred yards from the station's door.

The train from Salzburg steamed out.

As its rumble faded, I saw a flash from a lamp, and thirty seconds later I drew up beside the pavement where Geoffrey and Barley stood.

Without a word being spoken our baggage was lifted aboard, and as Barley climbed in among it, my cousin sat down by my side.

"Let her go, John."

Two minutes later the Rolls stole out of town. . . .

Ten miles on we pulled up by the side of the road.

I felt my cousin nudge me. Then he lifted his voice.

"Anything to report, Barley?"

The answer came pat.

"No, sir. Nothing at all."

My cousin sat very still. Then he slewed himself round in his seat.

"That's strange," he said. "I'd half an idea that you might perhaps have seen someone—someone you thought you knew."

"No, sir," said Barley, firmly. "No one at all."

"Look here," said Geoffrey, "before you left—"

A desperate voice cut him short.

"Could I see you alone, sir, a moment?"

"You can speak the truth here and now. Mr. Spencer isn't going. We're all three going to stay."

"Very good, sir. Then I seen Pharaoh. And Dewdrop beside. I'll swear it was them. In Salzburg: this afternoon. Come out of the station, they did, as I walked in."

CHAPTER III

On Patrol.

If Barley's news had given us something to go on, it pointed the wisdom of acting without delay. This for two very good reasons. In the first place, Salzburg for Pharaoh was dangerous ground, for anyone moving in Salzburg must plainly be under the hand of the Salzburg police; if, therefore, we could find him and then arouse suspicion sufficient to have him detained, although he might put up a fight, his race was as good as run. Secondly, it seemed pretty certain that Pharaoh had split his force and that Rush and the fourth of the rogues were yet in the countryside: and that meant that if we could find them, we should only have two men to deal with, and those very ordinary thieves. (And here I will say that since I afterwards learned that the fourth rogue was known as Bugle, from now on it will be convenient to give him his name.)

I will not set out our discussion of these very obvious points, for fully three hours had gone by before with many misgivings our plans were laid. This may seem something foolish, but it must be remembered that we had a great deal at stake, and the fear of abusing a chance which might not return continually haunted our efforts to make up our minds. In the end, however, we came to certain decisions, and since we stuck to these, I will say what they were.

Early the following morning, Geoffrey and Barley and I were to visit The Reaping Hook: that Bugle and Rush would be gone, we had no doubt, but we had some hope of tracing the damaged car. If this should lead us up to the men we sought, we should at once give battle and do our best to lay the two by the heels: but unless by midday we had picked up some definite clue, then Geoffrey and Barley would leave for Salzburg by train, whilst I remained at Plumage, lying low during the daytime and patrolling the roads about Yorick from dusk to dawn. "And I give you my word," said Geoffrey, "if only you'll mind your step, I think you're more likely to get there than Barley and I. We've got to search a city, and we don't know where to begin. But your field is much more narrow. In the first place, Yorick's a loadstone, and Bugle and Rush will naturally turn that way. . . . But you simply must watch your step. You're out to get information, not to attack. If you find them, you must not strike: lie down and see them home, and then drive all out for Salzburg and Barley and me. Will you give me your word to do that? And always to be back at Plumage before it's light?"

I gave him my solemn word, but I knew in my heart that he would never have left me if he had thought it likely that I should find Bugle and Rush, and that, though he disliked the idea of my working alone, he was doing his best to choose the lesser evil and to keep me away from Pharaoh at any price.

Thanks to my lady's foresight, we could now send word to Yorick without any waste of time, and before we left the next morning our groom was on his way to the castle, bearing a note from my cousin in which he had set out our plan.

It was barely eight o'clock when we ran into Annabel.

By Geoffrey's direction I stopped the car at cross roads out of sight of The Reaping Hook: then he and Barley descended and walked as far as the forge which was walling one side of the forecourt that graced the inn: and there Geoffrey stood by the corner while Barley walked up to the house.

As luck would have it, a servant was washing the steps, and a word from Barley brought him to Geoffrey's side.

Then my cousin turned and waved, and I brought up the Rolls, for, as we had fully expected, the birds were flown. One minute later we were speaking to the host and his wife. . . .

Now we had had no doubt that the moment we mentioned their late undesirable guests, the two would be only too ready to talk themselves hoarse: but we were not prepared for the spate of incoherence which our casual inquiry unloosed. The two were simply bursting to vent such a volume of grievance as I can only compare to the burden of Christian's sins. Since we were there to listen, there was clearly nothing to do but let the storm blow itself out, and when we had heard them in silence for what seemed a quarter of an hour and had inspected the spots at which violence had been committed or damage done, we ventured to put the questions which we had come to ask.

The strangers were gone.

What was the order of their going and what had become of their car?

Our words might have been a spell.

I have never seen human beings so suddenly change their tune. As though we had turned some tap, the fountain of talk stopped dead: all their excitement died an immediate death, and the two became as crafty and sullen as though we had come to trap them and do them some evil turn.

They had seen nothing at all. One minute the strangers were there, and the next they were gone. They had not seen them go: they knew nothing of any car: when we spoke of its being disabled, they glanced at one another and shook their heads.

"Scared stiff," said Geoffrey shortly, and went off to prove the servants—to no avail.

In silence we returned to the Rolls. "And now for Plumage and Villach. At least, this means we can catch an earlier train."

Four hours later I bade my cousin farewell.

* * * * * * *

Helena glanced at her wrist and folded the map.

We were sitting by the water at Plumage, and had been for half an hour, for when I got back from Villach, a note from my lady was waiting to say that I might expect her at five o'clock.

"Do you think you can find your way?"

"I think so," said I.

"By night, without lights, upon roads that you've never seen?"

I swallowed.

"If I make mistakes, it won't matter. When I've felt my way round twice, I'll know where I am."

"And then?"

"I propose to watch certain points—the turning to Lass, for instance, and the coppice that you call Starlight: that's where the road turns closest to Yorick itself."

"And the car?"

"I'll find some track or other and park her there."

Helena drew in her breath.

"And supposing they're there before you and watch you arrive. . . . They'll let you park the car and steal back to the road. They'll let you pick your position and settle down. . . . And tomorrow at dawn they'll be digging another grave."

"Be honest," said I, laughing. "Why on earth should Rush and his fellow be watching these roads?"

"I don't care," said Helena swiftly. "It isn't a one-man job. Mr. Bohun must be out of his mind. Will you take Sabre with you? At least, he'll give you warning if anyone else is at hand."

"I will, indeed," said I.

"What time are you leaving here?"

"About ten o'clock," said I.

"D'you think you can find the mouth of the entrance drive?"

"I can hardly miss that," said I.

"Sabre shall be there tonight at a quarter past ten."

I laid myself back on the turf.

"And I'm not to thank you," I said. "I stay at your house: I ride your horses: and now I'm to have your dog. As partnerships go, it seems to be rather one-sided."

"That," said my lady, "is foolish. What am I doing that, if you were placed as I am, you wouldn't be glad to do?"

"That ought to be the answer," said I.

She was sitting sideways, propping herself on an arm: and either because of her pose or because her hair was tumbled, she seemed no more the fine lady, but only a beautiful child.

Suddenly I knew that I was in love.

* * * * * * *

That night was very dark, and I would have given a lot to have seen but once by daylight the roads that I was to patrol: quite apart from picking my way, I could see no track or turning until I was actually there.

It follows that after ten minutes the only idea I had left was to get to where Sabre was waiting at the mouth of the castle drive: and this, after great tribulation, I found about half-past ten. I overran it, of course. However, I knew I was right, so I stopped the engine and listened and then stepped into the road.

I was hastening back in the shadows when I suddenly found that something was moving beside me, and then, before I could think, the Alsatian was licking my hand.

At once I turned, to make my way back to the car, but the dog did not turn with me and when I put my hand on his collar, he would not move.

I had not begun my patrol: the Rolls was out in the open: and Sabre refused to move. If he would not come. . . .

I perceived that the first thing to do was to get the Rolls off the road. If Rush and Bugle were out—

Far in the distance I heard the drone of a car.

For an instant I stood spell-bound. Then I was out in the road and was whipping back to the Rolls. . . .

Before I started the engine, I listened again, to hear on the road be-

The Drone of the Car Was Louder

hind me the footfalls of somebody running, but lightly shod. Then—

"In you go, Sabre," said Helena, opening a door.

As the dog leaped in, she took the seat by my side.

"A hundred yards on," she panted. "As quick as you can. There's a track on the right. I'll show you."

The drone of the car was louder—some car on the road ahead.

As the Rolls gathered speed—

"Now," said Helena. "Steady." I set a foot on the brake. "Put on your lights for an instant. . . . There you are."

As I left the road for the track, the drone of the car approaching turned into a snarl.

I stopped the engine and flung myself out of the Rolls.

"Stay here," I cried, and darted back to the bushes that were edging the side of the road.

The car was close now, and her headlights were on: but even as she passed me, her driver lowered his lights and slackened his speed.

Fabric "Firsts" Arrive for Spring

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FABRIC "firsts" for midseason and spring are even at this early date staging a great show in big stores as well as stores not so big. If nerves are tired and winter gloom begins to pall why not slip away for a few hours from dull care and go meandering down aisle after aisle of the new materials? It will act like a tonic. Try it.

There are quite a few things to learn about the new fabrics. Generally speaking both the linens and the cottons are taking on a soft crepey finish which is "different." Then, too, there is a tendency toward rough spongy finishes and novel nubbed weaves. Patternings show decided originality and in instances are almost amusing. The modernized prints depict bars and music notes, or perhaps shell or fish motifs and the newest thing is vegetable designs, and they are wonderfully good-looking. Very new, too, is the Tyrolean button motif which takes its cue from the bright painted wooden buttons that adorn peasant frocks and smocks and jackets.

It is well to keep in mind that cottons are scheduled to play a tremendously important role in the scheme of things. You will thrill at the sight of them. The newer types are positively baffling in that they so often give the impression of being handsome wool suitings or spongy soft uncrushable linens. They are that good looking they may be smartly worn about town, the new nubbed cotton tweeds making up most satisfactorily into tailored jacket suits.

For the do-your-own-sewing group the new materials are nothing less than inspirational. One of the newcomers in the realm of smart cottons of which you will be wanting to order a dress length at first glimpse is twine print, which looks more like a soft spongy loose woven linen canvas than anything else. You'll love this rough-surfaced cotton. It is cool and casual, doesn't crush, has practically no wear-out to it and is every inch smart and attractive in appearance. It has a hand-loomed effect with brilliant print on either white or natural grounds. The patterning is interesting, including square dot motifs in bright peasant blues and reds on natural, also florals in orange, green and brown. An allover scroll patterning in deep red on natural is, perhaps, handsomest of all.

The smart tailored coat frock pictured to the right is fashioned of dark-red-on-natural scroll-patterned twin-twine. Black grosgrain binds the collar and front closing. Black bar buttons and patent leather belt are used as trim accent.

The other gown pictured is a spectator sports mode done in a soft jersey type fabric of bemberg with narrow white stripes on deep toned grounds. The convertible neckline, ascot scarf and graceful cape sleeves are each fashion-right. This handsome fabric wears beautifully, resists wrinkling and is cool, sleek and slim under your topcoat. It is shown also in white grounds with bright colored stripes for wear when the warmer days come. It tubs or dry cleans nicely and easily presses slick and suave as new. Jersey type fabrics are fashion news this year and are sponsored by leading designers of Paris, London and American style centers.

STYLE ACCENTS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

With smart Parisiennes black with beige or tan or mustard or related tones is proving a very important color theme for midseason with promise of its increasing popularity for spring. For style-alert American women the new and exceedingly attractive accessory pigskin sets, as illustrated, offer an excellent opportunity to carry out the voguish black and beige alliance. For sophisticated town wear one could scarcely conceive of anything smarter in the way of style accent than the tailored natural color pigskin trio of bag, belt and hat as complement to a chic black coat after the manner pictured. The vogue for leather trimmings and trappings promises to be as insistent for spring as it has been the winter through.

WARM FABRICS ARE FAVORED BY WOMEN

Fabrics are of exceptional interest in their variety. The most important group is definitely irregular in nubbed weaves with a marked hint of informality entirely consistent with a more colorful season.

The really formal coat tends toward smoother, softly napped materials. Forstmann, the creator of these woolens, well realizes that winters in the United States bring frigid winds and low temperatures.

The slender silhouette, clinging lines and the response of the fabric to drape and tailoring are important factors, but women, young and old, want comfort in cold weather. They want physical comfort as well as the psychological comfort that comes from rich textures and deep colors.

Infinite Variety Is Shown in Apparel and Fabrics

Fashion this season has given a great deal for which to be thankful. She certainly has provided infinite variety in apparel for all occasions. Skirts of all widths and lengths, with necklines high and low, hats tilted fore and aft, crown low and high, sleeves as you like 'em. And such color and fabric distinction! In a season agog over novelty fabrics, most of them on the roughish side, slipper satin comes into position in the foremost ranks.

To the gorgeousness of metal cloths and velvets is added the charm of taffeta and the grace of chiffon. One may or may not use trimming, or choose between pleats and tucks.

Newest Color Fashion

The color of the moment is "golden wedding," a rich, warm shade of gold which lends itself well to formal evening clothes and to cruise and southern resort clothes. In silk, wool and cotton, this new tone is sure to be especially flattering to sun-tanned complexions.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

©, Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

A rich man can endow a laboratory or a hospital, but neither of them would be of any use were it not for the scientists who form the staffs.

The Scientist

The scientist is the real philanthropist.

He not only restores the ailing to good health but he contributes in one way or another to every activity which is for the betterment of the human race.

The scientist is not interested particularly in money.

He is interested in things that will make for the happiness and comfort of the men and women and children who compose mankind.

The country doctor as well as the noted specialist is a scientist.

The inventor is a scientist.

Orville and Wilbur Wright, who had their beginnings in a little bicycle shop in a small Ohio town, were scientists.

It is quite possible that but for their studies of air currents that flying might have been years longer in coming than it did.

If this country ever engages in another war, which heaven forbid, it will be the scientist who will have more to do with the winning of it than the generals.

The general may be ever so skillful in making ready for battle, but it is the high explosives in these days which count in war, and it is the scientist who has made high explosives and taught the fighting man how to use them.

The word science means knowledge.

The scientist not only has knowledge, but he knows how to apply it.

Without him the march of progress would not be possible.

Not long ago I visited the town where I was born.

When I left it we used cordwood for fire, got water from a pump outside the house, and if we took a journey we either rode on a train that was capable of no speed greater than twenty miles an hour, or else on a buckboard.

Flickering kerosene lamps were our only lighting systems.

Afterward when I visited the place its main street was brilliantly illuminated, half the population owned motor cars, and there was an airport just outside the city limits by means of which one could fly almost wherever he chose.

Scientists as a rule are modest. They are too busy with their jobs to get publicity.

But they have been the real builders of the modern world.

Worst Waste of All

Today business men are trying in every way to cut down waste.

Employees are called upon to do definite jobs in definite times.

If they fail, they must hunt for other jobs.

Machinery is kept in good condition because a breakdown in one department often may cause a stopping of work in many others.

That cannot be tolerated.

The value of time is known by every employer. It is understood by every employe in every large establishment.

But it is wasted to a greater or less extent by more than half of the people of this country.

And the worst thing about this waste is that it is the people's own time which is allowed to pass without any return whatever.

Take the case of the average man. He works hard all day in the shop or the office.

There he must think of the one thing that is important to his boss, which is getting the most done in the working hour.

But as soon as he gets home from his work, his time becomes his own.

The average employee in this country at least is not overworked.

He has three or four hours to read and study and think.

Of course he needs relaxation, but in moderation.

What does he do at least five out of every six nights in the working week?

Nothing of importance or usefulness.

The time that he has then is his own.

He could spend it reading. He could spend a part of it thinking, without any strain on his brain.

Instead, he either goes to a picture show every night or two, or goes downtown to play pool with the boys.

And if he cannot find any means to occupy his time he is unhappy and disconsolate.

It was in his spare time that Benjamin Franklin discovered the power of electricity and laid the foundation for the vast electrical development today.

It was in their spare time that most of the great men of the country got their educations, or supplemented them so that they could get some use of their intelligence.

Trotting around night after night seeking amusement is one of the surest ways to acquire mediocrity that has yet been discovered.

Budget your time. Decide how much you will use working and how much having fun.

Fun is useful and necessary.

But too much of it consumes more time than you really have to spare.

Don't be an "amusement hound." Take your pleasures in moderation.

TWO BIRTHDAYS LESS THAN NATIONAL DEBT

Ocean Beach newest, smallest and most exclusive club staged their first social event Sunday, January 26, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. N. Speer, 4761 Del Monte Ave. The event was in the nature of a dual surprise birthday party for Mr. Earl Hayes and Geo. N. Speer.

Those responsible for the successful and enjoyable affair were Mrs. L. S. Clark, Mrs. C. A. Padgett, Mrs. Earl Hayes, Mrs. F. C. Wisdom and Mrs. Anna M. Speer who constitute the entire membership of the newly organized club and named by the husbands present Sunday "The Secret Five". In addition to the above ladies and the guests of honor were L. S. Clark, C. S. Padgett, F. C. Wisdom, Dean Hayes, the Misses Leona Padgett, Margaret Elizabeth Wisdom, Martha Allison Wisdom and Frances Lee Wisdom.

The event was truly a success in that both of the surprisees were totally unaware of what was in store for them until the very last minute when the sponsors and guests assembled from all points of the compass. The two lucky men whose birthday was celebrated refused to state their ages but did admit that while they might be gettin a little bit along in years, that their combined ages were considerable less than the present national debt. Beyond that, they would make no admissions.
